Ecclesial Discernment and Open Questions

Convergences

Conversation in the Spirit was a valuable experience for all participants, allowing for open communication and listening to each other's perspectives.

This approach allows for careful consideration of controversial matters within the Church, such as the effects of digital technologies, non-violence, ministry, and sexuality.

To develop authentic ecclesial discernment, it is essential to approach these questions in the light of the Word of God and Church teaching, involving dialogue involving human and social sciences, philosophy, and theological reflection.

The relationship between love and truth is central to these controversial matters, as it is revealed in Christ's teachings. Jesus, in his uniqueness, listens to the cry for help and engages in gestures that communicate love and restore confidence.

We can only support others if we ourselves are undergoing conversion, both personal and communal. The difficulty we encounter in translating Jesus' clear evangelical vision into pastoral choices is a sign of our struggle to live up to the Gospel. If we use doctrine harshly and with a judgmental attitude, we betray the Gospel; if we practise mercy 'on the cheap', we do not convey God's love. The unity of truth and love implies bearing the difficulties of others, even making them our own, as happens between brothers and sisters. This unity can only be achieved, however, by patiently following the path of accompaniment.

Issues like identity, sexuality, the end of life, marital situations, and ethical issues related to artificial intelligence are controversial in society and the Church, requiring further study and reflection.

Matters for Consideration

It is necessary to continue ecclesial reflection on the original interweaving of love and truth flowing from Christological revelation, with a view to an ecclesial practice faithful to these origins.

We encourage experts in different fields to bring together their knowledge with their personal spirituality so that what they offer is a real ecclesial service. What synodality means in this context is a readiness to think together in the service of mission and in diverse settings, but with a shared sense of purpose.

We identified a need for reflection on the conditions that enable theological and cultural research that takes as its starting point the daily experience of God's Holy People and places itself at its service.

Proposals

We propose that initiatives enabling shared discernment on controversial doctrinal, pastoral and ethical issues should be developed, in the light of the Word of God, Church teaching, theological reflection and an appreciation of the synodal experience. This can be accomplished through in-depth discussions among experts with diverse skills and backgrounds, in an institutional setting that protects confidentiality and promotes frank discussion. When appropriate it should also involve people directly affected by the matters under consideration. Such initiatives should be set in motion before the next Session of the Assembly.
